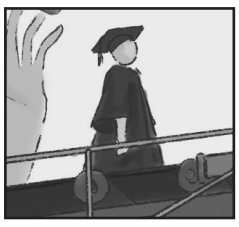
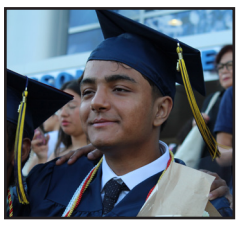
ANDOVER VIEW

Editor-In-Chief Columns / 2



Principal D'Andrea / 3

Graduates' Reflections / 4



Volume 5, Issue 6 | www.andoverview.net | JUNE 11, 2024

STAFF PHOTO / Saarvi Deshwal

The Andover High School class of 2024 throw their graduation caps up in the air in celebration, marking the end of their high school careers and the beginning of a new chapter in their lives.

AHS Class of 2024 Pave Their Own Andover Way

By Abby Chachus, Samantha Sun, Maddox To || STAFF WRITERS

The Class of 2024 has officially graduated! This year it took place at the Tsongas Center on June 3. Congratulations to all 419 graduating seniors, family members, and friends who've joined them through this long but rewarding journey.

The ceremony began with a welcome by Connor D'Angelo and Aisosa Oviasogie. The Class of 2024 is the 164th graduation class of AHS, which didn't exactly have a conventional start.

"To call the 2023-2024 school year eventful would be an understatement," said D'Angelo.

As Oviasogie noted, COVID-19 impacted their class early on in their freshman and sophomore years. Still, it never stopped them from accomplishing goals, challenges, or connections throughout their high school years.

Oviasogie thanked the parents and teachers for standing by them throughout high school and D'Angelo thanked all the administrators. D'Angelo also talked about Interim Principal Betty Taylor's changes and described them as "anything but temporary."

"Enjoy today, soak up happiness and joy," concluded D'Angelo.

Christian Yiannopoulos, a member of the Graduation Committee, announced that the senior gift being presented to AHS is funding to create a space to foster connection outside the elevator on the third floor. They will buy furniture to put in this space so that future AHS students can have a place that makes them both physically and emotionally comfortable.

William Tutwiler, a member of the Graduation Committee, announced and presented the Distinguished Citizen Award to Michelle Chachus, long-time social studies teacher and junior class advisor. Tutwiler described Chachus as a "kind, humble, and selfless being."

GRADUATION / page 3

STAFF PHOTO / Isabella Yan

AHS grads show off their decorated caps while preparing to take their seats.

Want to hear the seniors' final reflections? Read more on page 4!

Q&A Andover Coach EJ Perry Announces Retirement

By Jiya Jotwani || STAFF WRITER

EJ Perry III, an Andover coach since 2010, a 4th and 5th grade teacher at West and Sanborn Elementary, and a member of the AHS Hall of Fame, has announced his retirement. He will continue to teach until September 15 and his coaching ends after the current Boys' Volleyball season. He expressed that he values his job, so his decision to retire was tough. ANDOVERVIEW reached out to ask him about his career and retirement.

How and why did you start coaching?

I started coaching as my father's assistant. He coached for 53 years Track and Field in the Merrimack Valley, including Andover. He was the best coach that I ever knew. My grandfather Ernest J. Perry Sr. coached Track and Field at Lawrence High from 1926-1966. The Lawrence Track is named in his Honor—the Perry/Kent Memorial Track.

You have been teaching 4th and 5th grade at Sanborn and West elementary. Have you always wanted to work with kids?

I was very fortunate to have Coach Collins, Coach Hixon and Coach Bourdelais when I played at Andover High—they told me to pay it forward when I graduated. Coach Hixon, my basketball coach, helped me get into Colby College, where I played basketball in college. I scored 1000 points at Colby College (1184 points). So because they were such great role models I wanted to become a teacher or coach… [M]y dad and mom were [also] teachers, so I was influenced positively.

I understand you are in the Andover Hall of Fame. How did it feel to be named a part of that?

It felt great being named to the Andover High/Punchard High School Hall of Fame… 8 years ago I was [also] inducted into the Salem New Hampshire High School Hall of Fame. I won 6 Volleyball State Titles and 2 basketball State titles, so they inducted me as a coach. To be inducted as a coach was great, but it was remarkable being inducted into the AHS Hall of Fame as a player. There have been so many great players.

What advice would you give any student trying to get better at sports or any coach trying to balance their work with their home life?

Every student/athlete at Andover High knows my mantra – You are a student first and athlete second. The [other] component I tell every athlete is to act [like] and be a good person. It is a privilege to play high school athletics, so do it correctly. I have many young coaches who have coached with me—my advice to coaches [is to] understand that you are more than a coach to the high school athletes. You are a mentor, an advocate, an advisor, and a father-figure in some cases. Act professionally and know your athletes.

CORRESPONDENT PHOTO Carmina Merrill

Coach EJ Perry poses with a volleyball in the dunn gym.

EDITORIAL

Crucial Role of Summer Jobs

Today more than ever, high schoolers grapple with an extremely competitive job market and pressures to gain real-world experience before even graduating. Summer presents a golden window of opportunity. Classes are out for a few months and summer jobs and internships can now allow students to dip their toes into the working world in a way that is difficult to achieve during the academic year.

The allure of a summer internship or job should not be just about making some quick money. It's your chance to explore potential career paths and acquire valuable experiences that can't be otherwise gained from other sources. An internship allows you to get your feet wet in an industry or career, but also helps you determine whether it might be a good professional fit long-term. And, of most importance to many, it looks great on your resume.

Perhaps the biggest advantage of summer work is the ability to concentrate fully without the formidable time pressures and distractions of juggling a job or internship with a full academic course load. When not weighed down by classes, homework, and extracurriculars during the summer, students can treat their job or internship as their singular priority and commitment. This opens the door to taking on more responsibilities, putting in longer hours when needed, and having the mental bandwidth to absorb lessons that might get muddled when multitasking between too many priorities.

We are living in an increasingly credentialed world. Now, it's often not enough to just earn a degree. Employers are seeking new hires who have "rolled up their sleeves" and amassed relevant real-world experience to hit the ground running. Get out there and start folding pizza boxes – it might not seem like the most direct path to becoming a heart surgeon, but you never know where those dexterous finger movements could lead.

ANDOVERVIEW

Andover High School
80 Shawsheen Road
Andover, Massachusetts 01810
andoverview.net

STAFF

Co-Editor in Chiefs
Anusha Sambangi
Angela Mac

Copy Editors
Julie Mahoney
Eva Liss

Online Editor
Melody Tang

Layout Editors
Harry Guo
Brandon Nguyen

Sports Editor
Carissa Dessin

Correspondents Editor
Jill Slotnick

Faculty Advisor
Mr. Aubrey

ANDOVERVIEW is a publication written, edited and designed by the Newspaper Production class to serve as an open forum for students to discuss issues relevant to the Andover High School community. Letters to the editor and guest commentaries are encouraged; please email submissions to the following address:

andoverview@andoverma.us

If you would like to write for us or join the newspaper staff, please visit the Write for Us page on our website for more information.

Include contact information for verification purposes. The staff of ANDOVERVIEW reviews letters to the editor and guest commentaries and reserves the right to refuse material for reasons pertaining to length, clarity, libel, obscenity, copyright infringement, or material disruption to the educational process of Andover High School.

Staff

Molly Borenstein	Ella Hu	Julia Rodenberger
Abby Chachus	Samiha Jaffar Ali	Samantha Sun
Saarvi Deshwal	Jiya Jotwani	Ariana Teasdale
Anushka Dole	Sanjith Kalpat	Minati Thota
Lojyn Elkotory	Tommy Krueker-Green	Maddox To
Anya Gorovits	Xander MacKay-Kao	Grace Wang
	Vismay Ravikumar	Isabella Yan

ILLUSTRATION / Xander MacKay-Kao

FAREWELL COLUMNS

Graduating Editors Say Farewell and Thanks

By Angela Mac || CO-EDITOR-IN-CHIEF

I met my best friend in second grade. We did everything together. We'd have lunch together, play together, and sit in class together.

And we started high school together. Arm in arm, as we navigated the unfamiliar hallways, she turned to me and said, "Before you know it, we're going to graduate and head off to college."

I laughed at her and replied, "Seriously dude, that's in four years."

Well, she was right. It really felt like I had just moved to Andover and started kindergarten in 2011—blinked—and suddenly I was graduating with the class of 2024.

So, here is a thank you letter to all the people that made AHS meaningful to me.

To the friends I grew up with,

Even though we may not be as close as we were back then, you guys will always be my first best friends. You guys are a highlight in my childhood memories like when we played murder mystery at recess or made fake cupcakes out of plastic water bottle caps and tissues in Mrs. O'Keefe's class. Or the lunches where we'd gossip about boys and make plans for the weekend: "If your mom can drop us off, my mom can pick us up."

It was weird not having you guys always by my side when freshman year started in the middle of the pandemic. Though we talked less and less as high school went on, I knew you guys were always one Facetime call away.

I am proud of the people you guys are today. Conquering obstacles no one else could have conquered and achieving things no one else could have dreamed of. You guys are the pink to my purple. I can't wait to see the things you all will do.

To the people I sat next to in class,

I don't think I'd be able to graduate without you guys. From helping me with homework to letting me copy your homework, to laughing at my jokes when you're not supposed to, I am grateful that I got to be your classmate.

Specifically, I'd like to thank the people that were in my hardest classes. We bonded over low test scores and the crazy workload. And although I dreaded the days with these blocks, I still looked forward to them. You guys made these classes some of my favorites.

To the friends I made in senior year,

How I wish we had become friends sooner. Some of you are now my best friends and I wish I could've spent all four years of high school with you. Even though we may never see each other again after we graduate, I hope you know that I will forever cherish the memories we made and the laughs we had in senior year. It sucks knowing that we could've had even more fun, but we only have the "summer after high school" before we're off to college.

Soon we'll all be in different places, exploring new things, and making new friends, yet I'll never forget the college apps and the senior sliding. Thanks for making my last year at AHS so amazing.

To my favorite teachers,

You taught in a way that made me want to learn. Like how I wanted to learn how a ribosome functions, or how I wanted to know what happened during Andrew Jackson's presidency, not because I had to.

When I had trouble understanding I was never afraid to ask for help. You all were kind and patient, and often excited to explain it again in a new way. You are the teachers who shaped me into the student I am today and taught me to learn with purpose and with passion. Thank you for teaching me, in school and in life.

To my dearest friends,

All those times we hung out, or texted, or played games and talked in class; all those times when we had fun instead of doing our homework, it was worth it.

When I reflect back on my time in high school I don't remember that one bad test grade or those few missing assignments I never did. But I remember all the inside jokes and the bad singing. I shared all my experiences with you guys, no matter how big or small.

You guys are my second opinion, my wingman, and my go-to. You guys are my favorite people.

You all are the most talented and hardworking people I know, and I can't wait to see the incredible things you will accomplish. Though our paths may diverge, they will still cross from time to time. We're BFFs—Best Friends Forever—so let's stay in touch and hang out every once in a while.

By Anusha Sambangi || CO-EDITOR-IN-CHIEF

For a large part of my life, I have felt like I was working towards one decision: college. Whether it be taking part in programs or spending time in classes I thought would prepare me best for my time after high school, almost everything I did somehow related to this ever-present and life-changing "endpoint." Yet, as my college decision season ended and I began deciding where to commit, I found that finally getting an answer to that life-long question of where I would go to college wasn't as fulfilling as I thought it would be. I was excited about what was to come, but after "losing" the goal that had guided most of the decisions I made, I wasn't entirely sure what to do with myself.

In the name of fulfilling this goal of mine, I realized that I had been living in the possibilities of my future rather than completely in the present. I viewed high school as a time to "prepare myself for college" rather than enjoying it for what it was. As I spend the last few months with my friends, I vow to enjoy the moments I make now rather than concern myself with those to come.

So, to the class of 2025 and all others after them, know that getting into college or deciding what to do after graduation is nowhere near your "endpoint," nor is it completely unimportant. Take classes that challenge you and join clubs that interest you, but remember that there's always more waiting for you beyond the walls of Andover High. Use what you've learned here to achieve even more in your future, and don't limit yourself. That being said, appreciate the time you spend with your friends, family, and teachers while you can; don't wait until senior year to recognize the bonds you've made and all that you've accomplished.

On a separate note, this will be my last year at ANDOVERVIEW, and I couldn't recommend Newspaper Production enough. Through this class, I've had the privilege of working with an amazing group of writers to cover some of Andover's most important stories. Not to mention, I have made my closest friends here, and some of my favorite memories from high school come from the times I've spent with them in this class. It's been an honor working as a Co-Editor-in-Chief this year, and I wish the best of luck to future leadership!

What If Uni isn't for U?

AHS Grads Explore Less-Conventional Paths

By Anya Gorovits and Ella Hu || STAFF WRITERS

The idea of college has been drilled into our brains since we stepped into our classroom on the first day of school. Bring home straight As, volunteer, join extracurriculars… so you can go to college. Yet few people talk about the many other options available after high school. Several AHS seniors chose a different path from what would be their freshman year at college. This included gap and post-grad years as well as enlisting in military service.

According to Insider Higher Ed, "[It is estimated] that 3 percent of [college] freshmen take a gap year." These students usually join programs or groups with which they travel, volunteer, or learn abroad. Through this, they discover their passions that lead to their future careers.

Guidance counselor Nora McDermott explained, "Some students might not be ready to handle the responsibilities." They choose to take a gap year to learn more about themselves before taking on the stress of college.

A common fear about gap years is whether or not students will still pursue college afterward. McDermott urges gap year seniors to still apply to colleges and defer them for a year, so they have somewhere to go after their travels.

AHS grad Hadar Cohen Yashar is pursuing a gap year in Israel through the Upper Galilee Academy.

Gap years can be very educational and memorable. "It can be a great experience if they're thoughtful about it and choose the right thing," said McDermott.

Others opt for a postgraduate (PG) year. PG years are most common for student-athletes and can strengthen students' college applications. During their year as postgraduates, students gain more experience and independence in the field they want to pursue in the future.

McDermott explained, "[Some students] are just not ready to go to college, and it's an extension of high school with a little bit more independence."

PG years also provide more flexibility around courses with no requirement to fulfill any credits for graduation. Students can take classes that align with their field of interest without worrying about failing other classes. They will also be able to build confidence and knowledge in what they know about the field.

2024 grad Gwen Claman will do a PG year at Kimball Union Academy starting this fall.

Claman said, "I really want to make sure I feel confident in my ability to thrive in college, and I can figure out if I truly enjoyed [certain subjects] and want to pursue them. It will help narrow down my choices."

Claman chose to take a PG year even though she always thought she would go straight to college. She said, "I went with more of a logical choice than my personal choice. I wanted to go to college, but it made sense logically for me to take an extra year to make sure I am fully prepared and confident in my ability to stay on top of the work."

Other AHS 2024 grads taking a PG year are hockey player Anthony Deluca, baseball player Cam Norton, and artist Esme Ashworth. Another path for graduating seniors is to join the military. All six US military branches take 17- and 18-year-olds for service. However, according to USAA, less than 1% of graduating seniors choose to enlist.

Three AHS seniors have opted to take this route. Aaron Baruti is joining the Navy, Shaniqua Johnson is joining the Air Force and Anthony Salazar is enlisted in the Marines.

Principal Search Committee Reveals What Drew Them To D'Andrea

By Jill Slotnick || CORRESPONDENTS EDITOR

COURTESY PHOTO / Andover Public Schools

The AHS principal search committee, which selected James D'Andrea for the role, was impressed by his focus on town-wide communication and his experience with districts similar to Andover.

From teachers, students, and administrators to even parents, all parts of the AHS community were represented during the search for a new principal. Although the superintendent's office ultimately had the final say, they incorporated members of the high school in two rounds of interviews with the prospective candidates. The first round had students and other members of the community, with the second round incorporating the program coordinator. The diversity of the committee allowed for many different perspectives, demonstrating the varied needs of AHS to applicants.

Scott Armstrong, a math teacher and member of the first and second principal search committees said, "I think during the first interviews [D'Andrea] already stood out to me, just because of his background and his success with large school districts like Andover."

Scott Darlington, AHS Assistant Principal for over six years echoed the statement. "[R]ight from the very beginning [D'Andrea stood out]," he said. "He had an entry plan that was excellent, and basically [told us the] questions he would ask of students, teachers, and administrators to learn more about the community."

It is important for principals to be good communicators, especially in a district as large as Andover. Focusing on sharing information will strengthen ties between all parts of AHS. Throughout the interview process, D'Andrea showed his proficiency in communication in his responses to the interview questions and the written material he prepared. Furthermore, his success in past positions at Cheltenham High School and Northwest High School in Pennsylvania and Maryland, both heavily populated districts, demonstrates this ability.

"Based on my interactions with him, I think he's a very good communicator, which is a [huge] part of being a principal. You can have the best ideas, but if you're a poor communicator, no one's ever going to know about them. You constantly have to communicate to different stakeholders [in the school] like students, parents, teachers, and central office…you have to say [the same thing] in a way that [all] those stakeholders understand," said Darlington when asked about what drew him to D'Andrea. "I think he's positioned to be as successful as all our [other AHS principals]."

Seniors Overcome Adversity and Embrace Future

GRADUATION / from page 1

Her favorite part of her job is getting to know her students and because of this, she often has an impact on students inside and outside of the classroom, Tutwiler said. He shared that Chachus initially was planning to get into law, but with a change of heart, she decided to teach and has for 24 years. She has also been a junior class advisor for 20 years.

Tutwiler quoted something Chachus had told him in conversation: "If you really enjoy what you're doing, it never feels like work."

Edward Mukalazi, the class essayist, represented his fellow seniors with a speech that was both uplifting and sentimental. He said to his fellow peers, "As a class, we are the living manifestation of all of our loved ones' greatest dreams."

Mukalazi went on to mention that throughout their high school journey, the seniors faced many challenges and struggles. Mukalazi then stated that freshman year was navigating hybrid learning; sophomore year was adapting to a new, confusing schedule; junior year was panicking over prom dresses and suits; and senior year was full of college applications and meeting deadlines.

Yet, amidst all these obstacles, Mukalazi said, the class tackled these problems together. "By borrowing each other's pencils, looking over essays, and sharing Quizlets, we've climbed to the mountaintop. Together, we have grown," said Mukalazi.

He connected with and sympathized with the challenges that his fellow graduates faced. He then urged that, no matter what, his peers should never stop dreaming. "Appreciate the dreams of those sitting beside you. Be the dreamer that you are meant to be, as it is all everyone has ever wanted for you," ended Mukalazi.

Superintendent Magda Parvey stated that the Class of 2024 displays "their talents, strengths, and resilience in countless ways, using their access and the information at their fingertips" to educate themselves well.

As the seniors rise to the next chapter in their lives, she advised the Class of 2024 to follow five specific steps. Innovation: To use creativity to find solutions. Belonging and Inclusivity: To make sure all voices are heard. Social Responsibility: To always stay committed and make positive impacts. Resilience: To allow resilience to guide them through their future. Lastly, Authenticity: To always stay true to themselves.

Taylor, the interim principal for the AHS 2023-2024 school year, began her address with a booming voice and bright attitude, emphasizing the patterns of the word 'way' at AHS and in life and how the manner of doing something tweaks the trajectory of "the Andover way" and "the way for others."

Taylor had students stand up for the crowd's applause while she called out their student involvement at AHS, showing "their love of learning and dedication to the greater community."

"Go your own way," Taylor said, as she advised them to continue following their hearts and pursue their dreams.

d'agostino's deli

Andover Collection
Andover Warriors and Town Merchandise
Follow us on Instagram
@andovercollection
for our latest merchandise, sales and special holiday and event extended hours
Conveniently located downtown. Open Mon-Fri 11AM-5PM, Sat 10AM-5PM.
40 Main Street, Andover, MA 01810
Tel: 978-409-2245
www. AndoverCollection.com

Q&A: Seniors Reflect on their Time at AHS

Knowing what you know now, what advice would you give your freshman self?

Eddie Mukalazi: I'd tell him to ask for help and not be afraid to ask for help or say that you don't know what's going on because it doesn't matter, it just helps you out. You'll be better off in the long run if you learn to use your voice and speak up.
Enrico Panzica: As school goes on, people stop caring as much about what you do and what you're interested in so just be yourself and be happy with who you are.
Anjani Patel: Take it slow and have fun. Savor every moment. It will go by so much quicker than you think.
Rayna Parikh: Subscribe to Quizlet Plus early. I did it in the middle of AP Chem this year, and oh my God, would it have helped earlier.
William Tutwiler: Get involved as soon as possible. Whether it was sports or clubs or certain extracurricular activities, that's what will help you get acclimated to the school and feel like you belong.
Raj Kontham: Just branch out, always try new things, and meet new people, and have as many new experiences as you can 'cause you really don't know where things will take you... Just appreciate the moments you have as a freshman. It's a year that you'll never forget.
Shambhavi Jayakumar: Don't procrastinate 'cause it will be the death of you. All the work will pile on and then it'll be a big mess, but asking for help is the biggest thing.
Connor D'Angelo: It's not that deep.

STAFF PHOTO / Saarvi Deshwal
(From left to right) Seniors Cooper Granger, Elliot McQuide, and Noah Chanthaboun pose with their diplomas.

What teacher or staff member had the biggest impact on you and why?

Dominic Mazzariello: It's hard to pick one, but I would say Mr. Shea. He's one of the nicest guys ever and he taught me to hone in on my passions.
William Tutwiler: Señora Garcia, my AP Spanish teacher junior year. …knowing her story coming from an immigrant background, all the way to the United States, and just how she is as a teacher… and just how passionate she was about Spanish, not just the language but the history behind it. I'm minoring in Spanish in college, and she's the reason why I'm doing that.
Isabella Falco: Ms. I because she was able to help me with my ADHD and also help me grieve a loved one and I really appreciated that. She's always been there for me and she's been my biggest cheerleader.
Eddie Mukalazi: Ms. Reusch taught me in a way that I hadn't been taught before. She really allowed me to be hands-on in my education and explore topics that I was interested in and just explore my passions which I hadn't been inspired to do before in my education. It was really awesome to see myself reflected in the teaching staff and be taught by a woman of color.
Rayna Parikh: I'd say it would be Ms. Bettyann Iannucilli because as tough of a cookie as she is, she's so sweet. I think she's always been there for her students and she puts them first, even before chemistry.

STAFF PHOTO / Saarvi Deshwal
(From left to right) Seniors Raghav Tewari, Aarit Chauhan, and Amay Biswas smile for a photo outside Tsongas Center.

STAFF PHOTO / Saarvi Deshwal
Senior Connor D'Angelo poses for a photo with his family.

What are three words you would use to describe AHS?

Raj Kontham: Diverse, inclusive, and passionate. I think that there's so many groups in this school filled with students that are just so determined and hard-working, and yet, it's still one of the most welcoming and wonderful spaces that I'm so grateful that I've had the chance to have even been a part of. So, I just want to thank everyone that has made this experience so special and I wouldn't have it any other way.
Daniel Rodriguez: Long, tiring, and exclusive. You can't get it at a lot of other places. Exclusive in a good way.
Meghan Ong: Weird, chaotic, and fun.

What will you miss most about AHS?

Vismay Ravikumar (Valedictorian): I'm definitely going to miss the people and the friends I made along the way.
Anjani Patel: All my friends. It's going to be so sad. Even [on] the last day of AP Chem I was bawling my eyes out.
Enrico Panzica: Mr. Jannetti.
Cadence Singleton: My friends, and my little juniors. I'll miss them a lot.
Aneesh Ratnala (Salutatorian): I'm gonna miss the people. A hundred percent. Because I've made some of my closest friends every year. It's a lot of good people.
Connor D'Angelo: The little people in some of [my] classes that'll say something every now and then… and are just such a positive presence.
Shambhavi Jayakumar: Probably the community. I built a really nice friend group, and it's just [that] the entire community is really nice.
Sanjay Srinath: The people, the teachers, everybody.

STAFF PHOTO / Saarvi Deshwal
Senior Shambhavi Jayakumar embraces her brother after graduating class of 2024.

What's one experience or tradition from high school that you'll never forget?

Rayna Parikh: I played soccer for the four years I was at the high school and I think it was a really big part of me growing as a person and learning how to be on a team and be a leader.
Anton Shvets: Senior week was sad, but really fun. I'll definitely miss all the people and memories from it. Senior sunrise was also really fun.
Annabel Pierce: I just loved the football games, like the Jungle, that was my favorite part. I'll never forget those senior nights.
Ria Vaishnavi: My favorite experience that I'll remember forever is traveling with the Model UN team to Harvard every year. It was super fun and I got to be with all my friends, and we had the best advisor: Mr. McCarthy.

What are you most looking forward to in your next chapter?

Aneesh Ratnala: Moving, being more independent, also just defining my own career.
Annabel Pierce: Definitely having more freedom and having room to flourish a little bit.
Eddie Mukalazi: I'm looking forward to meeting new people and just exploring new places.
Vismay Ravikumar: I'm looking forward to getting out of my bubble and meeting people from all different backgrounds and cultures and an overall more diverse environment.
Connor D'Angelo: I'm most looking forward to being able to really specify what I want to go into. I want to [do] art curation, which is just a very specific field, so I'm really glad to be able to hyperfocus on what I'm learning and the classes I'm going to be able to take.
Abinaya Ganesh: I'm looking forward to studying music full-time and just being able to throw myself into it.
Daniel Rodriguez: To be living in a town that has people in it… I feel like you walk around Andover past nine o'clock at night and it's dead empty because [everyone's] sleeping, so it'll be nice to be in a town where everyone's… doing things.

STAFF PHOTO / Saarvi Deshwal
Senior Angela Mac poses for a photo with parents.

What is the wildest excuse you gave to get out of doing homework?

Zack Moskowitz: I threw up.
Abinaya Ganesh: I've made up field trips before, I think that counts.

How much money would it take for you to lick the floor of the school?

Zack Moskowitz: Realistically, easy two grand. Cash App.
Meghan Ong: A medium amount… I would do it for [probably] 100 bucks.
Daniel Rodriguez: A couple thousand. At least a thousand dollars.

What was your favorite under-the-radar activity or club at school, and why should others check it out?

William Tutwiler: DEI, a lot of people feel like they can't be in DEI for various reasons, so I think it's underrated.
Daniel Rodriguez: eSports. It's a varsity sport and there's no tryouts, so… free varsity letter!
Connor D'Angelo: National Art Honors Society is not really advertised, but it's a really fun organization, and you get a cool chord after all of it.

What was your favorite meal at AHS?

Abinaya Ganesh: The orange chicken hands down. The chicken with the fried rice.
Meghan Ong: The chicken pot pie.
Zack Moskowitz: None… Alright, the orange chicken, the General Tso's, that was fine sometimes.
Connor D'Angelo: I loved the fried chicken. That or the turkey dinner.
Daniel Rodriguez: The turkey dinner… no! The gyros.

STAFF PHOTO / Saarvi Deshwal
Senior Logan Gabriel poses with his family outside Tsongas Center.